monism and dualism in international law wikipedia - the terms monism and dualism are used to describe two different theories of the relationship between international law and national law. Many states, perhaps most, conceive of the relationship between international law and domestic law as falling into one of two categories: monism or dualism. Monism and dualism were originally conceived as two opposing theorizations of the relationship between international law and domestic law.