The Alfa Romeo 105 and 115 series coupés were a range of cars made by the Italian manufacturer Alfa Romeo from 1963 until 1977, based on a shortened floorpan from the Alfa Romeo Montreal. These cars were known for their sports car styling, and they were available in coupé and spider configurations. They were also notable for their use of Pininfarina design, and their performance was enhanced by the inclusion of the 2.0-litre engine and the 2000 GTA model, which was capable of reaching speeds of over 200 km/h. The Alfa Romeo 105 and 115 series coupés were highly regarded for their handling and performance, and they remain popular among car enthusiasts today.
