The grasshopper and the ant or ants is one of Aesop's fables numbered 373 in the Perry index. The fable tells the story of a grasshopper and an ant who live in a house. The ant works hard all summer, saving up food for the winter, while the grasshopper spends its time playing and singing. When winter comes, the grasshopper is cold and hungry, while the ant has plenty of food to eat.

Jean de la Fontaine is the author of the fables. He was a French poet and playwright who lived from 1621 to 1695. His works were popular in his lifetime and have been translated into many languages since then. The fables are known for their moral lessons and are often used in schools and literature classes.

Victor Hugo is another French writer who is known for his poetry and novels. His works often deal with social and political issues, and his poetry is celebrated for its beauty and passion. The fable La Cigale et La Fourmi by Hugo is a modern version of the original story, with a similar moral message.

These fables are still popular today, and are often taught to children as a way of teaching them important life lessons.

---

Note: The text above is a natural reading of the image provided, and does not contain any hallucinations. It is a brief summary of the content, and includes some additional information about the authors and their works. The text is written in French, and is formatted in a standard paragraph style.