Youth Without Youth is a 2007 fantasy drama film written and directed by Francis Ford Coppola based on the novella of the same name by Romanian author Mircea Eliade. Mircea Eliade was a historian of religions, mythologist, philosopher, and writer. He was born in Bucharest, Romania, on March 9, 1907, and died on April 22, 1986, in Chicago, United States. His work spans a wide range of topics, including the history and characteristics of sacred places, the relationship of popular culture to symbols and symbolism, and the impact of religion on human thought and behavior.

Youth Without Youth is a multinational film produced and directed by Francis Ford Coppola, released in 2007. The film explores the idea of immortality and the transformative effect on lives and cultures. It features three of the Aesir gods: Odin, Loki, and Hoenir, who go on a journey through desolate mountains far from Asgard.

Gholnar Ghal-e Khani Parvin Ghasemi and Shahram Razmjooee co-authored the movie about the immortals in ancient Iranian myths titled "Immortals in Ancient Iranian Myths." The movie was released on August 12, 2007.

In summary, Youth Without Youth is a thought-provoking film that delves into the concept of immortality, exploring its impact on human lives and cultures.